Burgers, Beer and Baseball Aplenty Near Chicago's Wrigley Field

Burgers, beers and baseball go hand in hand much like a baseball and mitt. This is particularly good when you're near Chicago's Wrigley Field which happens to be loaded with all of the above in Wrigleyville, home of the Chicago Cubs. Fans go crazy over Al's #1 Italian Beef (make sure to grab lots of napkins because you'll need them) while burger fans have lots of choices at Rokit Burger Bar across the street from Wrigley Field. DMK Burger Bar is about a mile or so away but worth the trip because their gourmet burgers are full of unique flavors that will have you coming back for more.

Those who like a cold one will appreciate the craft beer options at Goose Island, the brewery that gave us Matilda, 312 and Sophie.

It's not all American fare in Wrigleyville. Diners can choose from Mexican, Thai and Italian, too. Vegetarians and vegans have plenty of options from which to choose at all of these places but especially at Uncommon Ground which is known for using locally grown and organic ingredients.

Wrigley Field is right off the Addison Red Line stop so it's easy to visit even when a game isn't happening. The neighborhood skews younger, which will explain why it's packed with bars along Clark Street, but it's also home to many delicious, budget-friendly restaurants.

9 DMK Burger Bar

Chicago does like its burgers so the competition for a great burger in this town is fierce. DMK Burger Bar is relatively new on the scene but it's making serious waves with its quality and selection. Diners can choose from bison, grass-fed beef, turkey, lamb or veggie burgers, all of which are served on a freshly baked bun. An example: a bison burger served with goat cheese, pickled onions and blueberry BBQ sauce. Consider the sweet potato fries or the truffle aioli fries as sides. The place also has a full bar which is convenient because you can order a drink while your order is being prepared. ((773) 360-8686)
